South-west Herefordshire: Post-Ice Age Landscape and Settlement Features by George Charnock .....	15
The landscape and settlement features of the Olchon and Golden Valleys are combined with evidence from recent pipeline excavations to describe a post-Ice Age glacial lake system and its legacy.
The King's Acre Lime: extra light on the early history of Hereford by David Whitehead .....	31
The historical significance of a tree and a small roadside piece of land near Hereford is investigated, which throws light on Hereford before and after the Norman incursion.
'Mr. Droffnore, the Celebrated Traveller' and his influence on Mechanics' Institutes in Herefordshire by John C. Eisel .....	37
The story of an eccentric but well-respected man, combined with an extensive history of the mechanics' institute movement in Herefordshire.
Long or round?: evaluation programme and results at the Neolithic chambered monument of Arthur's Stone, Herefordshire by George Nash .....	59
Arthur's Stone is one of Herefordshire's best known ancient monuments. This investigation was undertaken to compare it with others locally and decide on its original form.
Chapel Farm, Deerfold, Herefordshire: a re-appraisal: part 1 by Duncan James .....	73
A detailed comparison of the architectural features of Chapel Farm with some other well-known buildings leads to some conclusions about their provenance. The second part of this article will investigate the historical context of the founding of the chapel.
Upmouths, cruckles and gilylins: notes on Wye fisheries between Ross and Monmouth by Rosalind Lowe .....	99
The users of the Wye have often come to blows, both physically and in the law courts. The documents produced in these cases provide a rich source of information about fisheries on this stretch of the river.
Some notes on the sources of decoration in 16th and 17th century vernacular wall painting by Michael Harrison .....	111
Some additional information on local vernacular wall-paintings and their symbolism.
