Presidential Address 2011: Herefordshire: the evidence for and against medieval dispersed settlement by Rosamund Skelton	27
Herefordshire is often described as a typical example of an area of ‘dispersed settlement.’ Detailed exploration of parish-level data shows that this is a superficial picture and that many parishes which now appear dispersed were nucleated in the past.
The Fungus Foray, 1875 by Rosalind Lowe	56
The Club’s publications in 2011 were full of references to fungi. Another cartoon of Herefordshire fungologists at work in 1875 has come to light.
The Herefordshire Philosophical Society by John Eisel	58
The Woolhope Club is a rare survivor of a number of similar Herefordshire societies which were founded in the early half of the nineteenth century. The Philosophical Society’s demise may be due in part to the Woolhope Club’s foundation, as can be deduced from this account of its relatively short existence.
All Saints’ Church in Hereford and the Brethren of St. Antoine-de-Viennois by Henry Connor	85
Many Club members may have lunched at All Saints’ church in Hereford and admired a stained glass window which commemorates the association between the church and the Hospitallers of the Order of St. Antoine-de-Viennois. The history of the Order and its connection with Hereford and its bishops is given here and some misconceptions corrected.
Faith and the future in 1889 by Alan Stone	91
Some conclusions presented in the paper ‘Charles Darwin and the Woolhope Club’ published in the 2009 Transactions have been revised in view of notes found in a copy of the Herefordshire Flora in Durham University.
Feverlege: a lost Premonstratensian Priory at Wigmore by Bruce Coplestone Crow	93
The area of the county around Wigmore has a long but involved ecclesiastical history dating back to the 8th century or before. This paper identifies another religious foundation and locates it in Wigmore.
Late medieval provision of shops in the borough of Weobley by Duncan James	99
Ongoing restoration of the late medieval buildings in Weobley plus dendrochronological testing has enabled a more detailed consideration of the way these buildings were used as business premises.

Madeline Hopton's sketches: the examples of St. Owen's and Goodrich crosses by Rosalind Lowe	115
The Woolhope Club library holds manuscripts which help to while away an enforced stay. In this case, a member's bequest helped supply some missing facts about wayside crosses.
Hereford Cathedral Barn by Ron Shoesmith	125
Hereford's cathedral close is dominated by the major buildings within so that it is easy to overlook a humble barn, part timber-framed, in the north-eastern corner. Documentary research and modern archaeological techniques have been used to demonstrate that it is both ancient and important.
Jim Tonkin's spur by Muriel Tonkin	147
A medieval spur has been found among Jim Tonkin's papers, but nothing is known about where or when it was found. Members may be able to help.
Edward Longmore, the Herefordshire Giant by Rachel Simpkins and Robert Walker	149
Until relatively recently, people of unusual stature could make a living being 'shown' to the public. Edward Longmore was a native of Adforton, in the parish of Leintwardine, and some details have been found about his career, his ancestry and his unquiet burial.
